(Belmont, MA) – Belmont Light is one of more than 2,000 other locally-owned utilities celebrating Public Power Week during the week of October 1st through October 7th.

Sponsored by the American Public Power Association (APPA), Public Power Week celebrates the benefits of hometown, community-owned electric utilities like Belmont Light. This year marks the 31st annual Public Power Week celebration.

“Public Power Week celebrates the reliable, affordable electricity that Belmont Light provides to our community,” Craig Spinale, Acting General Manager of Belmont Light said. “Public power puts the people of Belmont first, and Public Power Week gives us the chance to emphasize the advantages locally-controlled power gives to our customers.”

“Our service is reliable and safe and we take pride in serving our friends and neighbors,” the General Manager added. “Belmont Light is proud to have served Belmont for 119 years.”

As part of the Public Power Week celebration, Belmont Light representatives will be at the October 5th Farmer’s Market and will be distributing energy saving information and materials to Belmont residents. Information about the Belmont Light electric vehicle program will also be available.
